The Voice of the People

Editor Torrance Herald: Dear sir: I ran across the enclosed clipping from the Boston Globe (last week of April, 1928) and was wondering if it would be of not value, but "any use" to you in this week's issue of the Herald, just before the season opens. It appealed to me at that time and I cut it out to save it. My reason for sending this to you is this: I haven't forgotten and probably never will, your description of your evening, night and morning in the high country published in "Observations" last year. Sincerely, H. Archer Lewis. 1744 Gramercy Ave.

Out Where the Open Begins - "Soon the angler will be whipping sliding waters. His is the red blood of the naturalist, the explorer, the dreamer in the open.

Like a printed page he knows his favorite stream, the current life, the seasons. "The brook is like a close friend - he walks and wades with it, he hides where waters are still, drinks of its cold flood, and goes to a noontday rest with the melody of wild things singing in his ears. "He knows the seasons from the first appearing swamp cabbage to the late goldenrod and the last purple aster, from early bees on a high log and buds shivering with last frosts to the month of flame and the final flight of the austral-bound migrants. He knows intimately all these, and he hears, sees, smells and feels each phase of the stream's life, because he is a part of it and among moving events. "History is in the making, and the fishing and idling of his playing up and down the stream is truth. He is on the field of action - a part of things. Down along the little water-ways - the angler is close to earth, all her beauty and mystery. "Edwin C. Hobson."

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Andrus will leave Friday for Fresno to celebrate annual Raisin week with Dr. and Mrs. George R. Andrus of Fresno.
